Abstract

The American-Russian Relationship During the Period 1990-2010

Mohammad Ahmad Al-Ghaumri

Mu'tah University, 2010

The study seeks to identifying the American-Russian relationship strategies (cooperation, conflict and competition) in the light of shifting in the patterns of international relation after September eleven incidents, this study stemmed from the major hypothesis namely, "The American – Russian Relationship has been affected by affects the balance of power in the international order.

The study relied on the historical analytical approach in examining the study's topic and to answer its questions.

Findings of the study revealed that the American-Russian relationship has experienced a new shift this time that is from cooperation to competition not to conflict as it was the case in the former USSR. Whereas Russian capabilities has witnessed great advancement after they achieved several economic success.

At the same time, current Russian leadership style has been elevated over the "leadership crisis" which Russia lived with it for long time. Consequently, Russia has been looking for the Russian role in the world which has coursed the new shift in relationship, which has also its causes and consequences.

The study recommends that, the American administration should be aware that its unilateral dominance in the international arena has diminished; balance of power ha changed with the rising of Russia as an effective power in the international arena.
